The screenshot shows the Gale Opposing Viewpoints In Context website interface. At the top, there is a navigation bar with the Gale logo, the title 'OPPOSING VIEWPOINTS IN CONTEXT', a search bar with 'Opposing' entered, and icons for 'Advanced', 'Bookmark', and 'More'. Below the navigation bar, there are links for 'Browse Issues', 'Maps', and 'Curriculum Standards'. The main content area is titled 'Topic' and features the article 'Compensation for College Athletes'. To the left of the article is a photograph of a large stadium filled with spectators, with the caption 'A General View Of The Rose Bowl Game'. To the right of the photograph is a text block that reads: 'College athletics is big business. Top men's football and basketball programs make more than $140 million a year from TV contracts, advertising, merchandising, ticket sales, and licensing. Head coaches at top programs earn more than $4 million a year. The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA), the organization that regulates college sports, brings in money by selling the jersey numbers and images of players to clothing and game manufacturers. But the athletes themselves receive no pay for playing. Is this situation fair? College student athletes, in fact, have never been paid. The NCAA's position is that they are amateurs, people who...
